

Dirk D. Steiner (Ph.D. Penn State University) is a Professor of Social Psychology of Work and Organizations at the Université Nice Sophia Antipolis in Nice, France. He is the director of the Master's Program in Social and Work Psychology and Human Resources Management. He has published articles and book chapters in both English and French on topics such as job satisfaction, personnel selection, and organizational justice in journals such as Journal of Applied Psychology, International Journal of Selection and Assessment, Journal of Personality and Social Psychology, and International Review of Social Psychology. Currently, he is conducting research on the link between organizational justice and discrimination, particularly with regard to age discrimination, and on the relationship between fair management and well-being at work. An associate editor of the journal Le Travail Humain, he is also one of the co-editors of the series Research in Social Issues in Management.